Three faculty earn Eisenhower grants for work on educational programs

Three Bowling Green professors have been awarded a total of $203,653 in Dwight D. Eisenhower Professional Development Program awards this year by the Ohio Board of Regents.

Daniel Brahier and Jodi Haney, both of educational curriculum and instruction, and Roger Thibault, director of the Center for Environmental Programs, received the funds.

The grants are awarded to improve science and mathematics education in Ohio by providing professional development opportunities for teachers and by improving access to educational opportunities for historically underserved populations.

The grants are awarded to improve science and mathematics education in Ohio.

The Eisenhower program also promotes hands-on, action-based learning and helps teachers put the new state curriculum models for math and science into effect.

Bowling Green received the second highest amount of the 23 colleges and universities in Ohio that were awarded Eisenhower funds this year. Miami University received $222,112 for five programs.

Brahier was awarded $77,064 for a mathematics program titled Assessment Project Extended to Northwest, or ASPEN. This is an extension and a continuation of a project called ASPECT for which he received grant funds last year.

Brahier worked with 60 elementary teachers from Erie County on reform in math education. Beginning in the spring, they studied alternative assessment strategies for grade-school children in math, and during the summer took an intensive, week-long course in assessment strategies in which they were encouraged to come up with strategies that worked well for them personally and fit the needs of their students. Then in the fall, they evaluated and refined their ideas, eventually producing a document that could be shared with other teachers.

The ASPEN group is interested in heavy use of technology, both as an assessment and a learning tool in the classroom. Also, teachers from ASPECT will participate in teaching the teachers from the four-county area of ASPEN.

Since 1989, the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics standards have changed significantly in three areas: curriculum, teaching and student assessment. "With the new curriculum and professional teaching standards, teachers were saying, 'The old pencil and paper tests we've been giving in the classroom aren't going to work anymore, especially for problem-solving ability,'" Brahier said. This led to development of alternative methods of assessing students' progress.

The ASPECT and ASPEN projects will help familiarize teachers with the new NCTM standards in all areas.

Science is the focus of Haney's LEAP program, which stands for Local Excellence Through Action Partnerships, which received a $76,421 grant. This plan focuses on providing professional development for science teachers; fostering inquiry-based teaching and learning of science, promoting partnerships between students, teachers, administrators, parents, and the community, and increasing public awareness of the need for high-quality science instruction.

Schools in Wood County, Putnam County, Napoleon and Sandusky will establish teams that will receive training through Bowling Green and University of Toledo faculty, local business and industry representatives, media personnel and other school resource organizations. The materials generated will be disseminated using an Internet host system at the University, through state and local conference presentations and a regional science symposium to be held next October in Bowling Green. "This is teachers presenting to teachers," Haney said.

LEAP is meant to set the stage for National Science Foundation funding for a $3.5 million, five-year comprehensive training program Haney and two colleagues have proposed. The joint venture between Haney, Andrew Lumpe of the University of Southern

Parents of the Year

Parents of Bowling Green students were quite visible on campus Nov. 7-9 for the annual Parent's Weekend programs. One set of parents received particular attention — Michael and Judy Graham. They were named Parents of the Year based on an essay written by their daughter, Stephanie Zmuda (second from right). The family (including another daughter, Kristi) received personal congratulations from Charles Middleton, provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Distinguished teaching professor to address December graduates

Edmund Danziger, Distinguished Teaching Professor of history, will deliver the address at December graduation.

Approximately 1,200 students are expected to receive degrees during the commencement exercises, which will begin at 10 a.m. Dec. 21 in Anderson Arena. President Sidney Ribeau will preside.

Often honored for his teaching abilities, Danziger is completing his 30th year at Bowling Green. An expert in Ohio and American Indian history, he has also taught courses on American environmental history, the country's expansion westward and the Civil War.

In 1975, he was the recipient of a Special University Achievement Award for Academic Excellence. In 1988, the College of Arts and Sciences honored him with a Teaching Excellence Award and, in the spring of 1995, the college presented him with a Faculty Excellence Award. In addition, Danziger has been a multi-year finalist for the Alumni Association-sponsored Master Teacher Award.

In June 1995, the University's Board of Trustees honored Danziger by naming him a Distinguished Teaching Professor. It was the trustees' action which led to the invitation to deliver December's commencement address.

"Whether instructing undergraduate or graduate students, his teaching is grounded in a thorough knowledge of his subject," Donald G. Nieman, chair of the history department, said of Danziger. "He brings to the classroom knowledge, insight, enthusiasm for scholarship and an inquiring mind developed in 30 years of productive research that have earned him recognition as one of the nation's leading scholars in American Indian history."

In addition to teaching, he has served as director of the department's graduate program from 1974-77 and as department chair from 1981-85.

The recipient of numerous research grants and the author of more than a dozen journal articles, he is also the author of three books, Survival and Regeneration: Detroit's American Indian Community, The Chippewas of Lake Superior and Indians and Bureaucrats: Administering the Reservation Policy During the Civil War.

He is a member of the Organization of American Historians and the Western History Association.

Spirit Day event to usher in holiday season

All faculty, staff and students are invited to attend this month's Spirit Day celebration on Friday, Nov. 22, in the Falcon's Nest of the University Union.

Between 7-11 a.m. hot beverages and holiday treats will be provided free of charge as a courtesy of the Union staff.

All are encouraged to wear BGSU colors or symbols to show spirit and pride in the University. Faculty and staff with a class or student employees in their office are welcome to stop by and share a break with the students.

Also during the event, Administrative Staff Council will be collecting warm, winter woolies for donations to the Salvation Army's "Coats for Kids" program. A collection box will be set up in the Nest to collect used or new coats, gloves (particularly mittens), scarves and hats.

The donated items will be given to youth from infants to 18 years of age for distribution throughout northwest Ohio. Items donated by Firelands faculty, staff and students will be collected by their area Care and Share program.

If you are donating used items, please be sure that they are in usable condition (coats should have working zippers and buttons). For further information about the coat drive contact Sheila Rieser at 2-8586.

Faculty earn Eisenhower grants for work with area school districts

Illinois and Charlene Czerniak of the University of Toledo made it to the final round of considerations for NSF funding last year, and the three are hopeful they will succeed on the second try, Haney said.

The third grant, in the amount of $50,168, was awarded to Thibault for a project titled "Extinction as a Process: An Interdisciplinary Paradigm for Teaching Science." The program is aimed at students in grades six through 12 in northern Ohio, and brings together the fields of astronomy, archaeology, ecology, environmental science, evolution, geology, earth science and geography.

"The topic of extinction encompasses the past, present and the future," Thibault said. It capitalizes on the "dinosaur mania going on now and the resurgence of interest in extinct species, and also deals with the fact that right now, we have the greatest number of species going extinct in the history of the world due to the destruction of the tropical rainforest."

Like the other two grant programs, the extinction project involves teachers mentoring other teachers.

Many Bowling Green faculty assisted in developing the program and have ongoing involvement. Also, six outstanding teachers from northwest Ohio who have participated in previous OBOR workshops will form a development, implementation and assessment team to explore theory and materials pedagogically. The content and methods will be closely tied to the state curriculum model for science and the proficiency exam topics.

This summer, an intensive, two-week workshop will be offered to 30 teachers from around the state, with 10 spots reserved for teachers who serve under-represented student populations.

The workshops will include field trips, computer simulations and lab experiments designed to encourage hands-on learning and teaching of science. Teachers who attend will receive academic credit. The goal of the project is for these teachers to then take what they have learned back to their own districts. — Bonnie Blankinship

Dance company performs on campus

Nearly 3,000 students and their teachers will be on campus today and tomorrow to see performances by the Dayton Contemporary Dance Company.

Heralded by The New York Times as "one of the nation's most vital and accomplished small modern-dance troupes," the company will perform at 10 a.m. and at noon on both days. Each performance will last about an hour.

The students and teachers are from more than 30 schools that are participating this year in Arts Unlimited, an arts education outreach program begun by the University in 1981.

Arts Unlimited offers summer workshops on how to incorporate the arts in regular classroom instruction for teachers at all levels and provides participating schools with visiting artists and presentations throughout the year.

SPAR sponsors budget workshop

The Office of Sponsored Programs and Research (SPAR) will host a budget workshop at 8:30 a.m. on Friday (Nov. 22) in 106 University Hall.

This workshop will be targeted to faculty and staff who are responsible for budget development and who could benefit from a comprehensive review of budget preparation.

While the workshop will be general in nature, the information will be relevant to many federal and state agencies' requirements.

Space is limited. Those wishing to attend should contact the SPAR office as soon as possible at 2-2481.

Russian faculty give presentation

Four Russian faculty who are working on campus this year through the Junior Faculty Development Program will offer a presentation about their home university and the region surrounding it at 11 a.m. Tuesday (Nov. 19) in 355 Education Bldg.

The faculty are from Mari State University and the region of Mari-El, Russia.

The faculty are Natalia Biryukova, professor of pedagogy and psychology; Alexander Kosov, vice president, Mari State University; Tatiana Gusakova, director of computer services; Eugeni Tsaregorodtsev, professor of economics.

The Junior Faculty Development Program for Russia and Ukraine is administered by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, and sponsored by the United States Information Agency.

Classified staff meet Tuesday

Classified Staff Council will meet at 9 a.m. Tuesday (Nov. 19) in the Taft Room of the University Union.

The scheduled speakers will be Richard Hebein, associate professor of romance languages, and John Smith, graduate student in guidance and counseling, on the topic of ombudservices.

Some discussion items on the agenda include the NCAA accreditation, supervisor evaluations, the search for a new human resources director and the BGSU Image Committee, on which six classified staff will be serving.

Discounts offered for airline travel

To defray the cost of airline travel of University employees and students, the Office of Sponsored Programs and Research has entered into an agreement with USAir, Inc.

Faculty, staff, students and guests on University-related travel from Toledo Express airport will be eligible for a 5 percent discount off the lowest applicable fare following all restrictions and a 10 percent discount off full coach class fares.

These discounts are in effect through Aug. 31. They are available for one-way, round-trip or circle trip travel. However some restrictions apply.

To take advantage of the discounts call USAir at 1-800-334-8644 and refer to file GF26630362.

In addition, USAir has authorized Uniglobe Travel (352-9336) as the local ticketing agency to provide these discounts.

WBGU-TV on-air 24 hours a day

WBGU-TV is now offering programs on a 24-hour schedule.

Many of the signature PBS programs, such as "Nova," "Masterpiece Theater" and "The American Experience" are being re-broadcast at night for those who cannot watch them during their regularly scheduled times.

University Vision Statement:

Bowling Green State University aspires to be the premier learning community in Ohio and one of the best in the nation. Through the interdependence of teaching, learning, scholarship and service we will create an academic environment grounded in intellectual discovery and guided by rational discourse and civility.

Did You Know?

Bowling Green State University is one of nine campuses listed in Computerworld's third annual "100 Best Places to Work" rankings.

Each work site is on the list "because they have exceptional information systems organizations," according to the magazine.

The 100 best include Fortune 500 companies, large state and federal government agencies, colleges and universities, and the nation's largest management consulting and systems integration firms. Bowling Green ranks 64th.

Other campuses on the 1996 list are the University of California at Davis, North Dakota State University, Kansas State, the University of Notre Dame, Florida Atlantic University and the University of Delaware.

Writers look at the daily lives of 53 everyday working people

Bottom Dog Press has announced publication of Getting By: Stories of Working Lives, edited by Larry Smith, English professor at Firelands College, and David Shevin, a graduate of Bowling Green's M.F.A. program in creative writing.

A mural of the lives of working Americans emerges through the stories, essays, poems and photographs of the book's 43 contributors.

Among the book's contributors are Frederick William Zackel, English; Debra Benko, a Bowling Green part-time instructor in English, and photographer Rebecca Colon, a BGSU graduate.

Smith said the response to the call for material for the book was overwhelming. "Writing came in from all over the country." Almost all the writers and photographers represented are from working-class backgrounds. "Some are new and many have long publishing records including Philip Levine, Tom Wayman, Vivian Shipley and Sue Doro," he said.

Their work describes the daily lives of people in 53 different jobs, from factory and steel workers to waitresses and preachers. Even snake killers have their say. Material is organized around themes of family and neighborhoods, the working state of mind, ingenuity and persistence, struggles and getting by and dignity and the work ethic.

"As the title says, a lot of work is done just to get by until you finally get the job you really want to have," Smith said. Colon's poignant cover photo of work clothes hung out to dry on a cold and windy day aptly expresses the steadfast spirit of the work.

A series of national readings is planned for New York, Pittsburgh, San Diego, Cleveland, Columbus and Sandusky.

Publication of Getting By was supported in part by a grant from the Ohio Council on the Arts. It is the press's 40th publication.

The book may be purchased at University bookstores or ordered directly for $11.95 postpaid from Bottom Dog Press, c/o Firelands College, Huron, Ohio 44839.

Gifts

Alison Scott, head of the popular culture library, holds up one of the 713 movie posters donated to the University by an Indiana theater-owner. Edward Prusiecki of Hobart, Ind., also gave the University more than 350 individual reels of movie promotional "trailers" used to publicize coming attractions.

Program brings students and staff together based on the languages they speak

All across campus, conversations are going on in many different languages, facilitated by a new program for students.

The Cross-Cultural Conversation Connection pairs international students who wish to practice their English skills with American students or faculty who wish to brush up on another language or simply get to know someone from another culture.

The program results in the creation of some "good chemistry," according to Kim Andrus, program coordinator this semester.

This semester there are 22 pairs of students participating in the program, including some visiting Russian faculty members.

Much care is given to creating the pairs, Andrus said. Although participants can be faculty, undergraduate or graduate students, Andrus attempts to unite people of similar academic backgrounds, gender, age, language and interests.

Once the pairs are made, a festive kick-off party is held in which participants are given the names of their partners and must find them among the crowd.

After the party, the couples are encouraged to meet once a week for about an hour to talk, or about 10-11 times a semester, although some meet more often. They are given some suggested topics for conversation to help get them started.

"Some good friendships have come out of this. We've gotten really positive comments on the experience from people who've been in it," Andrus said.

Faculty in several departments offer extra credit to their students who participate in the program. Shirley Ostler of the English department and coordinator of the master's program in teaching English to speakers of other languages, encourages students in her "Introduction to Linguistics" class to become conversation partners because "it opens the eyes of students. My objective is to help them realize that how a language functions is more than just theoretical abstracts. When they sit down to talk with a Korean or Chinese student or someone from Ukraine and they see how difficult it can be to make unfamiliar sounds, they see in living color what we're talking about in the classroom."

The conversation connection "provides a rich accumulation of insights into people born in another part of the world, and also gives some fresh insight into their own American experience" when they encounter the perceptions of their international counterparts, Ostler said. The international students tend to be fascinated by American slang, for example, and are intensely curious about American customs such as Halloween celebrations.

The program is of special value to students in certain departments. Communication disorders students often join the program to gain experience with people who have difficulty communicating, said Virginia Martin, director of the English as a second language program.

Another large audience includes students majoring in college student personnel, she noted. It is important for them to have contact with international students. "It's good for employment later."

Bowling Green is one of only a few universities that offers a two-year graduate assistantship in international programs to college student personnel majors. This is a coveted position, and there is only one at a time. Those who have held this position have gone on to very good jobs, Martin said. "It's a significant distinction for anyone who wants to work with international students." — Bonnie Blankinship

Administrative Staff Council adopts nine goals for 1996-97 academic year

Administrative Staff Council has developed nine goals for 1996-97 to support its mission of promoting a healthy climate for learning and professional growth as well as enhancing the University's programs and services.

The members of council adopted the following goals at the Nov. 7 meeting:

- To continue to be an advocate for administrative staff concerning the position analysis and compensation study.

- To continue to participate in the development of a performance evaluation procedure which provides an equitable assessment of performance for all administrative staff members.

- Continue to offer and expand existing administrative staff programs that will enhance opportunities for Bowling Green State University students.

- To be an advocate for administrative staff members and their concerns and needs related to the University's health benefit plans.

- To continue to be an advocate for and to offer professional development opportunities for administrative staff.

- Secure an overall salary and benefits package that ranks BGSU's administrative staff in the fourth position among public universities in the state of Ohio.

- Continue to develop and improve communications and public relations among administrative staff.

- Continue to collaborate with both the Faculty Senate and Classified Staff Council on issues of common concern.

- Create a home page for Administrative Staff Council that would enable communication with groups similar to administrative staff council on other campuses.

Correction

Lester Barber, executive assistant to the president, did not speak out against the resolution on non-faculty input to hiring committees at the Nov. 5 meeting of Faculty Senate as was incorrectly stated in the Nov. 11 issue of Monitor. Barber's comments were directed to the specific language of a proposed substitute motion on the issue. He was in favor of the resolution.
